

Manon Cornellier is an UQAM graduate in communications. She is a editorial board member for Le Devoir since February 2016. From 2006 to 2016, she was a political columnist for the same paper and before that, from 1996 to 2006, parliamentary correspondent. She's been covering federal politics since 1985, first as a freelance journalist for La Presse, TVA, TFO and Québec-Science. Before joining Le Devoir, she worked for six years as a parliamentary correspondent for La Presse canadienne. Winner of the Judith-Jasmin Journalism Award 2007 in the Opinion category, she is a contributor to several electronic medias. She published «The Bloc» (James Lorimer Publishers) in 1995 and has completed in June 2009 a master in political science at Ottawa University. Ms. Cornellier has been president of the Canadian Parliamentary Press Gallery in 1992 and from 2015 to 2017 and, in 2018, received the Charles Lynch Award for her coverage of federal politics.
